EXPLOSION, FIGHT AND ARRESTS AT SAND PATCH TUNNEL

Four Hurt, One Seriously, When Stationary Engine Blows Up at Bore.

FIREMAN IS SEVERELY SCALDED

James Hitchman of Meyersdale, Rushed to Cumberland Hospital; Negro Held for Stabbing Another; Foreman Nabbed for Trespassing.

One man killed and three injured yesterday in a boiler explosion at Sand Patch tunnel, a fight in which a workman was stabbed seriously and an arrest following an alleged attempt to induce laborers to quit work on repairing the Baltimore & Ohio bore, were reported today.

The report of the boiler explosion, however, later was modified. James Hitchman of Meyersdale, fireman of a stationary engine operated by the Kerbaugh Construction Company, which is repairing the tunnel, at first was reported as having been killed in the explosion. It was learned afterward, he had received perhaps fatal burns and that he had been hurriedly removed to Allegany Hospital at Cumberland, Md. The names of the other hurt were not given.

Hitchman's wife and daughter are at his bedside. He formerly conducted a motion picture theatre in Meyersdale, where he has resided about a year. His home is in Mt. Pleasant, where he is connected with a prominent family.

William Lewis, colored, was arrested by a State constable on charges of aggravated assault and battery and mayhem. He was accused of stabbing Daniel Anderson, a negro, during a fight at Sand Patch, Tuesday. Anderson was wounded six times in the breast and face. His condition is considered serious. He also was bitten on the neck and wrist. Lewis was sent to the Somerset jail in default of $500 bail, demanded by Justice of the Peace Hay at Meyersdale.

On a charge of trespass filed by the Kerbaugh company, Edward F. Murphy, foreman for a railroad contracting firm in West Virginia, was arrested. It is alleged Murphy tried to induce workmen at the tunnel to quit and to take employment on the West Virginia line. Justice Hay held Murphy in $500 bail for the September term of court.

More than $2,000 was expended today in pay to the 900 or more workers on the tunnel repairs.

B. & O. WRECK AT DUNBAR

Four Freight Cars Leave Track, Delaying Traffic Short Time.

One B. & O. steel gondola and three box cars were derailed at Dunbar at 1 o'clock this morning. Freight traffic on both tracks through Dunbar was delayed a short time. The wreckage was not cleared away until 7 o'clock this morning.

The cars were thrown into the creek. It is said a brake beam dropped and caused the wreck. An engine attached to each end of the train also caused the cars to buckle, throwing them off the track.

STORMS HAMPER RAILROAD BUILDING IN WEST VIRGINIA

Monongahela and Buckhannon & Northern Delayed by Slides Caused by Rains.

With every storm, damage to the newly constructed roadbed of the Monongahela Railroad extension from Martin to the Pennsylvania-West Virginia State line and of the Buckhannon & Northern Railroad, between the State line and Fairmont, W. Va., is caused.

At Dillinger's ferry, opposite Point Marion, a huge section of the hillside slipped onto the road bed, necessitating the removal of hundreds of yards of dirt. At another point along the new railroad, in a ravine under the road, the railroad sank six feet.

Much of the track on the Pennsylvania end of the line has ben laid, and delay in opening the new railroad into West Virginia will be caused by slides. On the West Virginia side, scarcity of labor is seriously handicapping the contractors. A few days ago, the entire force of laborers employed by a contractor, quit and took employment on a pipe-line through Monongalia county, not far from the railroad.

Contractors have been forced to offer higher wages and other inducements to get men.

BURGESS FOR FLOOD BONDS, TO BE CONSIDERED AT MEETING

Evans Favors Issue, Which Will Be Discussed Tonight by Council.

Interest today centered in the meeting of Council this evening at which Connellsville streets most in need of flood protection will be considered preliminary to the proposed special bond issue. Aside from the selection of streets proposed to be improved, it is unlikely Council will take other action. The Borough Engineer probably will then be asked to prepare an estimate of the cost of paving and sewering.

"I think the bond election will carry," said Burgess J. L. Evans this morning. He added a number of people seemed in favor of the proposed project. The Burgess further declared that the business portion of Pittsburg street ought to be repaved. Bricks on the streets, he said, were worn and if picked up, break in two. Parts of the street have been paved about 20 years.

The city, with the proposed bond issue, would pay one-third the cost of paving, the other two-thirds to be assessed against property owners.

Borough Engineer Hirst this morning estimated the cost of paving a width of 25 feet at $2.50 a lineal foot.

RAINS MAKE BOAT STAGE

Coal Companies Expect to Ship South If Present Depth Continues.

As a result of recent heavy rains there is likely to be another coal boat rise in the Ohio at Pittsburg. All stations up the Allegheny, Youghiogheny and the Monongahela, indicate that the rainfall was very heavy, in some places there being 1½ inches of precipitation. As the ground has been heavily soaked by rainfalls the last few weeks, the streams will get the great benefit and consequently a rise will not be unexpected.

The River Coal Company has several million bushels of coal to send south and it will be shipped as soon as the rivers reach a boating stage. In addition to this all the boats now on the way north will be able to reach Pittsburg with heavy tows of empties, which will mean additional work for the river miners.

6,000 AT WORK ON HIGHWAYS ALL OVER THIS STATE

Advance of Army of Men on Roads Already Shows Results.

LABOR SCARCITY SEEN HERE

Contractors Seriously Handicapped, However, by Shortage of Workers and Teams, Paying the Former $5.50 a Day for Two Horses.

Six thousand men are at work on the highways which Pennsylvania has taken over for the establishment of the State road system, and already the preliminary work on repair and maintenance of highways is beginning to show. Dirt is flying in every county in the State, and roads which were neglected are being put into condition for easy and safe travelling by wagons and automobiles. In some districts transformations have been made of roads which were notorious for their condition and on which little or no work had been done for over a year, because of expectation that the Commonwealth would take them over.

Contractors, however, on the roads throughout the State are handicapped seriously by lack of laborers, according to local reports today. Good teams are at a premium, and the contractors are paying $5.50 a day for two-horse teams.

The work under way is the commencement of a State-wide system of maintenance, and, owing to the vast amount of attention required is not what the State Highway department will be able to do when the $50,000,000 bond issue is voted for the construction of roads. State officials say that they are doing the best possible with the appropriation at hand and will welcome the cooperation of farmers and property owners through whose district the State highways extend. It is recognized that if people passing over roads will report to the county road superintendent places which require attention everyone will be benefitted and the State enabled to get the best results.

PENROSE ACCUSES ROOSEVELT AND FLINN IN DEFENSE TALK

Says Latter Offered $2,000,000 for Seat, that Former Approved Standard Gifts.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—Senator Boies Penrose exploded a political bomb in the United States Senate yesterday afternoon when he rose to a question of personal privilege and replied to the attacks hurled at him in connection with the publication of a letter from John D. Archbold of the Standard Oil Company to the Senator transmitting a certificate of deposit for $25,000 in 1904.

Penrose admitted receiving the money from Archbold and explained it was a campaign contribution used in the Presidential campaign in Pennsylvania.

Going further into the transaction Senator Penrose said this $25,000 was but part of a contribution by Archbold and other Standard Oil people. Penrose alleged that President Roosevelt and National Chairman Cortelyou both knew of the donation and of others and were gratified.

Turning his attack upon William Flinn Senator Penrose declared that Flinn in 1904 offered Israel W. Durham and himself $1,000,000, or even $2,000,000, to support him for the appointment as United States Senator to succeed Senator Quay. He also said Flinn had solicited the aid of John D. Archbold in his candidacy for the Senatorship, and he quoted a telegram from Flinn to Archbold and a reply from Archbold, the latter in cipher, on this subject.

WILKES-BARRE, Pa., Aug. 22.—An attack on Senator Penrose was made by Colonel Roosevelt last night, after he had read the Senator's statement in the Senate. The ex-President quoted from letters and telegrams which he had sent to George B. Cortelyou, chairman of the Republican National Committee, in 1904, to prove that no contributions had been accepted from the Standard Oil Company. Roosevelt declared Penrose's statements false.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 22.—Former State Senator William Flinn of Pittsburg and E. A. Van Valkenburg, editor - politician of Philadelphia, State leaders of the Bull Moose party, conferred yesterday, which resulted in an explanation and denial of Penrose's statements.

LEMONT MINE IS OPERATING PARTIALLY FIRST SINCE FLOOD

Davidson Workings Also Active, as is White Shaft of the Frick Company.

Partial operation of the Lemont No. 1 mine, which was flooded, July 24, and in which three miners lost their lives, was begun yesterday by the Frick company. The plant is operating at about one-third its capacity.

So far, no trace has been found of the body of John Scanlon, the only one of the three not yet recovered. All of the mules have been removed from the mine.

Half of the Davidson works, partially flooded Monday, are in operation. The mine will be in full operation in two or three days. A quick shipment of pipe was made from Latrobe to Davidson, Monday night, by the Frick company. The pipe, 12-inch in size, was shipped to Greensburg by express and brought to Connellsville on a special West Penn car. From here, it was transported to Davidson by teams.

The White mine, which was partially flooded Monday, is operating at half capacity today, but will be operating fully in a day or two.

Senate May Hear Penrose Charges.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—That the issue of veracity between Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania, and former National Republican Chairman George B. FOURTH BODY FOUND IN POLECAT MINE BY FOREMAN GANIER

Martin Felish, Aged 42, Discovered in Old Slope of Superba Workings.

HAND CLASPED THE BELL ROPE

Corpse of Dead Miner, Badly Decomposed, Hangs Upon What Rescuers Consider His Chosen Guide to Safety from the Flood of July 24.

The badly decomposed body of Martin Felish, aged 42 years, one arm hanging over the bell-wire in the mine, was found in the old slope of the Polecat shaft of the Superba Coal Company, by Mine Foreman W. A. Ganier, at 2.30 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The corpse, the fourth recovered from the flooded workings, was removed to the temporary morgue at the mouth of the mine, and prepared for burial, which occurred in the Polish cemetery near Uniontown, this morning.

The body was found about 100 feet beyond the place where the bodies of the miners found Saturday and Sunday nights were recovered. It is believed Felish was working his way to the mouth of the mine, with the bell wire as a guide when the flood caught him.

Felish is survived by his widow and son, 16 years old. The widow, grief-stricken at the loss of her husband, created no scene, however, when her husband's body was brought from the mine. The family moved to Evans Station from Jersey City, N. J., a short time prior to the flood in which the breadwinner lost his life.

Ganier, when he discovered the body, was wading in the workings searching for bodies of the entombed miners. There are still ten bodies in the mine. These may be recovered at any time, it is said.

Advices today from Grafton, W. Va., are that the West Virginia Traction & Electric Company, which recently acquired the Union Utilities lines at Morgantown, W. Va., and the Elm Grove Traction Company at Wheeling, are conducting negotiations for the purchase of the Grafton Traction Company.

The acquisition of these properties, it is said, is the first step in the building of a great traction and power system throughout the Cheat and Monongahela valleys and which, it is thought, will depend upon the new American Water & Guarantee Company's $1,000,000 power dam at Cheat Haven for current.

HOUSE IGNORES TAFT VOTE; PASSES SPANISH WAR PENSIONS

United Press Telegram.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.—For the third time the House yesterday passed the legislative, executive and judicial appropriations bill over the veto of President Taft by a vote of 154 to 53, but in the Senate the effort to pass it failed, 34 to 27. As a result the House amended the measure to provide a continuing appropriation for the Commerce Court until March 4, 1913, passed it and it lies with the Senate Appropriations Committee, with good prospects that it will pass.

The House last night passed a bill granting pensions to the widows and orphans of officers and enlisted men who served more than 90 days in the Spanish-American war and the Philippine insurrection, who are in need of assistance. From the roster of the Spanish-American War Veterans' organization it has been estimated there are 4,000 widows of men who served in those wars, and it is estimated that about one-fifth of these widows, or 800, will come under the terms of the bill. More than $100,000 a year will be added to the present pension payments.

3 Unique Features

OF THE

W. F. FREDERICK PIANO CLUB

(1) Cash Rebates
(2) Life Insurance
(3) 365-Day Exchange

Of course the first consideration is the quality of the instruments. The quality of the Pianos and Players we are offering in this club is above question. Such instruments, instruments of such high grade, were never before offered in a club. They are of rare merit and renown.

The pianos are Regular $375 and $400 Quality. The players are $600 Quality. These are the regular selling prices, and these will be the selling prices when the club is filled with 1,000 members.

To club members only the Price of the Piano is $278 and of the Player is $450. The difference is a clear saving of money to those who join the Club.

As unusual as the prices are the Club Terms. Instruments of as high grade could never before be bought on such terms—a $375 piano at $278, on weekly payments of only $1.50—and a $600 player at $450 on monthly payments of only $10. That's 21c a day to pay for the piano and 30c a day for the player. Of course you can pay faster if you wish to—and doing so our Cash Rebate plan gives you back in cash 25c on every $1.50.

LIFE INSURANCE—We want to emphasize this extremely attractive feature of our club contract. We give you a real life insurance policy by which we agree, if an account is not in arrears, to cancel all remaining payments, and give a receipt in full in case of the death of a club member. This assures the family against loss if the club member should die before the piano is paid for.

And then we have a free 365-day exchange clause in our contract. Let us tell you about it. It is added to an unlimited guarantee. Even if you merely change your mind you may send your piano back inside of a year and its full value will be allowed on any other piano or player you select.

Absolutely no such thing as equal values or equal privileges to those enjoyed by members of this club. And the instruments are right before you to see. You don't have to travel to one of our big city stores to get the benefits of this wonderful club. Come in now—the number of instruments assigned to our local store is limited. Delay may mean disappointment.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Out of Sorts

THAT IS, something is wrong with baby, but we can't tell just what it is. All mothers recognize the term by the lassitude, weakness, loss of appetite, inclination to sleep, heavy breathing, and lack of interest shown by baby. These are the symptoms of sickness. It may be fever, congestion, worms, croup, diphtheria, or scarlatina. Do not lose a minute. Give the child Castoria. It will start the digestive organs into operation, open the pores of the skin, carry off the fœtid matter, and drive away the threatened sickness.

Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

THE desire to fish is one of man's primitive instincts. When your day off comes you hie away to the place where fields are green and the sunlight dances on ripples or lies in checkered shadows on the pool beneath the old sycamore tree. You like to feel the nibble—then the strong pull of the bite—to hear the swish of the line as you play your catch. Then when you get hungry—how good it all tastes—the sandwiches, the cheese, the pickles—and last and best of all, foaming, sparkling, cooling

BLAMING THE FOREIGNER.

The Washington Reporter.

Mayor William J. Gaynor, of New York, may be a good farmer and know all about the tilling of the soil but we will chance winning that gentleman's disfavor and say right here that he is mighty careless in his use of words. In a letter on the Rosenthal case, Mayor Gaynor is quoted as saying in regard to the foreign population of New York that a large proportion of this population is made up of criminals and degenerates and that gambling and other vices and crimes are almost altogether in the hands of foreigners.

It seems to us that the mayor has fallen into the error of many others, that of generalizing whenever the word "foreigner" is mentioned and of declaring without hesitation that all or nearly all the crime in the land is due to the presence of so many aliens. If the mayor and others like him will but stop for a moment and look about it will be realized that a whole lot of good in this country is being accomplished by these same "foreigners."

Who is it that is bringing up most of the coal in Western Pennsylvania? Who is it that is digging subways and building skyscrapers in our great cities? Who is it that is making possible the greatness of the beet sugar industry of our western land?

The man depended upon in all these things is this same "foreigner." It is not the selected foreigner or the exceptional one that is aiding in these great works and making dreams come true but it is the general run of foreigner. And in this vast number of men from other lands is it surprising that there should be some who give way to sudden wicked passions or who are prone to engage in questionable enterprises? Why even among the nation proud Americans themselves men, yes, and women, too, are found who are guilty of all these things. Even so lately as yesterday the Pittsburg district was stunned by two black crimes, crimes of murder and suicide—the killing of children, even and those who perpetrated these deeds were Americans with no "foreign" taint.

As to "degenerates and criminals" it were better not to say anything. Men who make careless use of those two words are as a rule not overly deep thinkers. Real students of today lean strongly to the view that both these so-called classes come within the definition of sick folk and as such need hospital treatment rather than punishment and denunciation.

No, neither Mayor Gaynor nor any other American born man or woman can lightly lay as responsibility by laying the blame for everything unpleasant and shocking on "degenerate and criminal foreigners."

EMPHATIC WARNING.

The Greensburg Tribune.

Agents of the State Livestock and Sanitary Board have issued emphatic warning for all persons to use every precaution to prevent being bitten by dogs infected with rabies.

This same kind of warning has been sent abroad before. In the years past, mad dogs have created consternation in communities and have bitten people and animals. The unusual large number of cases of rabies in this part of the State has caused some concern and although many dogs have been shot and others quarantined there is danger of the epidemic spreading.

Some places the State quarantine for a period of time. Caution and precaution should be taken against this danger of the dog.

Many dog fanciers have fortified themselves along this line and argue that there is no such thing as mad dogs. They even go so far as to state that dogs in the heat of summer get stomach trouble and that is the extent of their trouble. Statistics tell a different story. County records show that large amounts of money have been expended to send people to hospitals for Pasteur treatment. In cases where the victims of mad dog bite were not financially situated to pay for treatment and care.

Now is the time to use the ounce of prevention.

NOAH'S LOG BOOK

By Isaac of Yukon.

[illegible] of July after entering the [illegible] was the [illegible] one during the [illegible] Noah read the [illegible] and gave binding instructions in [illegible].

The first week of [illegible] Noah was detailed to cook the meals, feed the storks, ducks and geese, make the beds, churn butter; milk the cow and goat and put out the wash.

Ham was detailed to feed and curry the horses, mules, donkeys; feed the wild animals; clean out the stables; chop kindling; oil the churn, grindstone and coffee mill and wash the monkey cage.

Shem was detailed to stand on the bridge and watch for icebergs; dip up water for the animals; see that the ark does not run into any snag; keep the flag floating and see that the grizzly bears get lot of fresh air.

Japeth was detailed to look over the morning exchanges; write the tame editorials; hold a bushel basket under the long-distance wireless receiver, compile the social column; write the heads; oil the press and stay at the desk until 8 oclock to receive subscriptions.

Mrs. Ham was instructed the first week to wash the dishes; mend the shirts and stockings; gather the eggs; feed the poultry; turn the grindstone for Noah; help with the wash and receive company Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Shem was instructed to slop the hogs; dust and sweep the ark; make candy and ice cream; keep the chestnut blight from getting on the elephant's trunk; polishing the giraffes' necks and making sausage.

Mrs. Japeth was instructed to act as trained nurse the first week; to see that Ham got his dose of Four-Fold liniment each night; to make Mrs. Ham take anti-fat; to put some neutralizer in Shems coffee and to take care of her mother-in-law if she got a chill.

The second week the board of ark management met and elected Ham janitor with a salary of $125 the month. Shem was elected principal at $250 the month. Ham raised a kick on wages and so his salary was raised to $250.

Mrs. Shem presented a bill of complaint saying that she could not sleep on account of Ham and Japeth talking every night about the bull moose. They wanted to hire her husband to let the bull moose eat out of his hand and that she did not want.

The matter was referred to the bull moose committee.

P. R. R. IN TRESPASS WAR

Railroad Company Reports $100,000 Spent in 1911 Campaign.

To secure the co-operation of municipal authorities in its warfare agains trespassers, the Pennsylvania railroad yesterday made public figures showing that its police department in 1911 spent more than $100,000 in campaigning against trespassing. This was nearly 20 per cent. of the total cost of maintaining the railroad's police force.

A number of years ago, the Pennsylvania set out to perfect the organization of an efficient police department. Members of the force travel over the road both on passenger and freight trains, and while protecting the property of the company, make it their duty to look out for trespassers. The company adopted this policy, according to its latest announcement, to protect life and its property.

In 1907, 916 trespassers were killed on the Pennsylvania railroad alone, but due, probably, to the active campaign against trespassing, the number dropped in 1911 to 627.

MORE CONTRACTS IN FURNACE COKE AT $2.25 EACH TON

Additional Business Brings Sales 40,000 Tons Monthly to End of Year.

LATEST DEALS FOR 15,000 TONS

Prompt Market Continues Active, Since Last Report Aggregate Not Far From 10 000 Tons, Some of Which Went for $2 30.

From The Weekly Courier

PITTSBURG Aug 21—Additional contracts for furnace coke have been closed in the past week to the extent of fully 1[illegible] tons a month over the balance of the year, divided into two or three contracts. It is understood that all the selling under contract in this movement thus far has been through the Producers Coke Company sales reported this week being at $2 25 the same price as obtained in the sales of about 2[illegible],000 tons a month noted in last report and making fully 40 000 tons a month sold in the past fortnight or since the deadlock on contract coke was broken.

The prompt coke market has continued active. Sales in the last report aggregate not far from 10 000 tons, much at $2 [illegible] although in a few cases $2.30 was obtained. For two weeks there does not seem to have been any sale of standard grade sold either prompt or contract at less than $2 25 and this price seems to be thoroughly established as the minimum with all the [illegible] at an early date.

The attitude of sellers is that in view of the large amount of contract business expiring June [illegible] it has been necessary to move a large amount of coke at whatever price it would bring, the policy of curtailing production not being an advantageous one from all viewpoint [illegible] or curtailing operations would [illegible] the [illegible] labor [illegible] there might be [illegible] serious difficulty in finding them [illegible] again. The [illegible] in the past two or three weeks [illegible] has [illegible] been [illegible] the market and [illegible] All the [illegible] therefore the coke operator [illegible] more comfortable position [illegible] able to [illegible] price. There are reports already of $2 [illegible] and [illegible] having been obtained on contract coke but these reports have not been fully verified.

With [illegible] with contracts are probably fairly well fixed for the present month and the market may [illegible] for a week or two [illegible] which have been buying [illegible] will need to come into the market again for September and they will [illegible] for the remainder of the year. An interesting feature of the situation [illegible] common consent both producers and consumers are committed to the [illegible] only [illegible] at negotiations [illegible] throughout [illegible] except in the [illegible] the usual foundry coke contracts.

With the steady improvement in the [illegible] and the [illegible] the prospects are all in the direction of increased blast furnace operations fortifying the position of the coke operator. Another element which may eventually result in a larger demand for Connellsville coke than can now be seen [illegible] of the outside cokes which [illegible] much of such outside coke has been bought [illegible] furnaces [illegible] for longer or shorter periods. The question [illegible] whether such purchases take the furnace out of the market for the [illegible] half year. The furnace which started the use of such outside coke may find it so satisfactory that they will [illegible] to come back into the [illegible]. The [illegible] strength of the Connellsville market has been without any demand from such furnaces and their return if they do return will constitute an entirely new element of strength in the situation.

FATHER OF STEEL INDUSTRY CELEBRATES 90TH BIRTHDAY

John Fritz Builder of Bethlehem Works and Noted Inventor, Honored

BETHLEHEM, Pa Aug 22—John Fritz known far and wide as the father of the steel industry in the United States attained his 90th birthday anniversary yesterday. The dinner given at the Waldorf Astoria in New York 10 years ago in celebration of the 80th birthday of Fritz still is remembered as one of the most remarkable gatherings in this country of captains of invention and industry and the central figures of finance allied with the iron trade.

It was hoped that some similar affair might be held to commemorate Fritz's 90th year but the precarious condition of his health caused the idea to be abandoned. For the last six months the veteran ironmaster has been in poor health and much of the time bedfast. Messages of inquiry and cheer have been received at his home almost daily from leading men in the iron and steel world from Andrew Carnegie to the active present day plant managers, many of whom in years past were numbered among Fritz's "boys."

John Fritz long ago earned his title of father of the steel industry not by any single invention or discovery but by a contribution of new devices new methods and practical work in building up the industry in the United States. With only a district school education gained near his birthplace in the middle part of Pennsylvania he gained a position in the steel industry that has been recognized by the whole world.

At the age of 16 Fritz left his father's farm to work in a country machine shop to learn the trade of a machinist. After various experiments in steel making at Norristown and Safe Harbor he went to Johnstown where he remodeled an old mill and built what is now known as the Cambria iron works. It was at this period that with his brother George [illegible] designed and erected the [illegible] known [illegible] high bloomer with [illegible] automatic tables and the [illegible] high mills. These inventions start[ed] an economical revolution in steel manufacture.

When the United States Government some 25 years ago decided to [illegible] modern navy of armor plated vessels equipped with guns of great calibre there was no plant in the country where the plate guns and forgings for such ships could be made. Bethlehem was selected as the [illegible] for the projected plant and Fritz was chosen to build it. He went to Europe and spent months in study [illegible] plants [illegible] he [illegible] built a plant [illegible] which contained [illegible] the [illegible] hammer [illegible] most [illegible] Fritz [illegible] Schwab [illegible] and others who subsequently [illegible] famous in the steel industry [illegible]

Fritz is the only man now living [illegible] the [illegible] that introduced into the United States the [illegible] process. [illegible] economy [illegible] has [illegible] the tremendous development [illegible] today in steel manufacture in the United States. In 189[illegible] the [illegible] Steel Institute [illegible] Fritz the [illegible] gold medal which is the [illegible] distinction [illegible]

QUOTABLE MARKET IN STEEL RESPONDS TO 1.35C POUND

Advances in Prices Continue, Some Mills Quoting $1 Rise a Ton

NEW YORK Aug 21—The American Metal Market and Daily Iron & Steel Report will review the steel and iron trade tomorrow morning, as follows:

Advances in steel prices continue. At the beginning of the week several mills began quoting bars plates and shapes at an advance of $1 a ton and now the new price of 1.40c on plates and shapes immediately met a general response so that the quotable market is now quotable at 1.40 to 1.[illegible] [illegible] months [illegible] the feeling among producers seemed to be that the old price of $2 a ton be [illegible] bar prices and plate and shape price [illegible] would be restored, but the mills are so eager to make advances that they have difficulty in refraining from advancing bars when an advance in plates and shapes has been made and thus it is doubtful whether bars will stop at less than 1.45c.

Effective last Thursday the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company advanced blue annealed sheets from 1[illegible]c to 1.50c for 10 gauge the advance immediately becoming general as some of the independent mills had already been quoting 1.50c.

Our composite of finished steel prices has now advanced $2 25 per net ton dating from June 28th while the advance from the low point of early March was $[illegible] up to June [illegible] th. In other words steel prices have advanced more in 60 days of what is normally a dull season than they did in 90 days of what is normally a very [illegible] season.

A common subject for debate in [illegible] circles is whether the [illegible] without a parallel [illegible] history of the steel business [illegible] exact replica of [illegible] Both sides are warmly defended [illegible] There is reason to believe that the number of those [illegible] is [illegible] reason and that the number of those who are dubious about 1913 [illegible]

THE BIG STORE

Only Three Days More

Yes it is the truth there are only three more days of the great sale of the Feldstein-Levine Company and our own stock left.

Just like a New York theatre production. When the end of each act produces a fitting climax until the last act, when it in all its beauty presents to the audience a climax that leaves an impression that lasts for months. So it has been with this sale. Each day has brought to the people of this vicinity greater and greater saving opportunities until now, when the grand final climax is at hand. So will there will be a fitting end to the greatest sale that Connellsville ever had. Price is a lost word at the Big Store for the 3 remaining days. We have only one ambition now, and that is that when the Big Store closes its doors Saturday night that the Feldstein-Levine stock will be history in this store.

Space does not permit us to enumerate the many bargains contained in this Big Store but will suffice to say. Come to this great final windup and you will find that a dollar will go farther than you expected.

SIDELIGHTS ON TOLLS AND TRAFFIC OF PANAMA CANAL

Probably Will Carry More Than 10,000,000 Tons by 1915.

Interest and Maintenance Will Amount to $15,000,000 Per Year.

THERE are other considerations involved in the question of Panama canal tolls than those relating to foreign treaties and domestic railroads. For example, there is the problem of making the big ditch self sustaining.

No one has made a more exhaustive study of the Panama canal tolls than Professor Emory R. Johnson of the University of Pennsylvania, who was a member of the Isthmian canal commission from 1899 until 1904 and was appointed by President Taft in 1911 a special commissioner to report on Panama canal traffic, tolls and the measurement of vessels. He is also the author of the report to the Isthmian canal commission on the industrial and commercial value of the Isthmian canal in 1901.

His preliminary statement, prepared at the behest of the president and the secretary of war, has just been published by the government. It comprises the first five sections of his more extended report, which is to appear later. He also contributes to the August issue of the North American Review an article entitled "Panama Canal Traffic and Tolls," and the statement which follows incorporates the conclusions of Dr. Johnson as expressed in these two publications.

Will Cost $15,000,000 Per Year.

Dr. Johnson directs his inquiry first to the annual revenue from the canal necessary to meet the charges of operation and the interest upon the investment. The maintenance of the canal, it is estimated, will come to $4,000,000, including the expenses of the zone government. Placing the total investment at the conservative figure of $375,000,000, the interest at 3 per cent would be $11,250,000. On this basis of computation it would be necessary for the canal to earn $15,250,000 a year.

The question of what charge to levy per ton upon the traffic requires for a satisfactory answer complete knowledge as to (1) the amount of available traffic, (2) the effect tolls would have to prevent traffic and (3) the prospective rate of increase of traffic. The author's researches go to show that had the canal been open in 1910 the registered tonnage of vessels that might have used the waterway to advantage would have been 8,328,029. The chief items in this total of entrances and clearances are the 3,148,403 tons representing the commercial intercourse of Europe with western South America and that from the oriental countries east of Singapore and Oceania. To take the forward look, it is estimated by a close study of the rate of normal increase that the traffic by 1915 would amount to a total net registered tonnage of 10,500,000. It is declared conservative to put the rate of increase for the Panama canal at 50 per cent in a decade. In the decade of 1900 the gain of the Suez canal was not less than 70.28 per cent.

Saving In Coal.

Besides the relative distances by the Panama canal as against competing routes, two important factors affecting the volume of the traffic are the tolls charged and the cost of the coal consumed. Panama with reasonable tolls will get the traffic of Hawaii and of the west coast of North and South America, but it is to be borne in mind that the bulk of commerce of Pacific Asia and Australasia will be readily diverted to Suez if the charges at Panama are deemed excessive. "The commerce between the central or agricultural portion of Chile and Europe would probably be diverted from the Panama canal through the strait of Magellan by tolls of $1 per ton net register were it not that the vessels engaged in this trade will desire to pass up and down the west coast of South America to engage in the trade at intermediate ports. An even greater advantage which the Panama route will have for shipping engaged in the European-Chilean trade will be the cheaper fuel costs. Vessels taking the strait of Magellan route from Chile to Europe must purchase large quantities of coal on the east coast of South America at prices 50 per cent above those that will prevail at Panama and at West Indian stations. The difference in coal costs by these two routes will be equal to a half or possibly more than a half of the canal tolls."

A freight steamship of some 8,000 tons register went last year from New York to the Philippines and back via the Suez canal. Her coal bill was $20,868.75. If she could have been routed through the Panama canal and by way of San Francisco and Yokohama to Manila the coal would have cost $18,222.50, which would have meant a saving of almost $1 per ton of the ship's net ton register.

Suppose that the advance in tonnage using the Panama canal should be 60 per cent—and it may be more—between 1915 and 1925. In the latter year it would come to something like 17,000,000 tons. That the estimate is not excessive is shown by the fact that the Suez canal, at the present rate of increase, will show 20,000,000 tons in 1915 and 35,000,000 tons in 1925.

Saving In Distance.

There are some instructive tabulations of comparative distances. For instance, let us take the distances from Philadelphia to points on the Pacific seaboard via Panama and via the strait of Magellan. From Philadelphia to Portland, Ore., the Isthmian route is 5,884 miles, and that via the end of South America is 13,832. To San Francisco the distance is 5,234 miles by the former route and 13,182 by the latter. As for European ports, taking Liverpool as typical, we find the distance to San Francisco 5,686 miles less by way of the Isthmus than it is via Magellan. To Honolulu the saving is 1,962 miles and to Guayaquil 5,108 miles. Twenty days would be saved between New York and San Francisco by a sixteen knot vessel. These figures are sufficient to indicate the desirability, from the point of view of mere mileage, of utilizing the Panama canal.

In the opinion of Dr. Johnson "the tolls at Panama, in so far as they are a charge for a service rendered, may be made equal to the money equivalent of the services rendered by the canal to the commerce that derives the least benefit from the shorter route afforded by the canal. * * * Neither the tolls that shipping can pay for using the Panama canal nor the limits that any particular toll will give to the canal traffic zone can be determined solely by comparing distances via the Panama canal and alternate routes." But, taking into consideration the various factors that affect the reckoning, it is his conclusion that "it is not probable that any considerable share of the commerce of the Atlantic gulf coast of the United States with western South America would be diverted from the Panama canal by tolls of $1 or even more than $1 a ton net register." The traffic between this seaboard and Australia and New Zealand may be expected to use the Panama route if the tolls are not more than $1 per ton. The traffic between Europe and New Zealand via Panama, at $1 per ton, would probably not be more than 50 per cent of the total traffic.

"The possibility that the Panama canal may be used by at least a minor share of the shipping between Europe and the Pacific ports of Asia and the apparent prospect that New York may become a transfer point for a portion of the trade of Europe with the far east make it desirable that the tolls should be lower at Panama than at Suez." Suez tolls on Jan. 1, 1912, were $1.30 per net ton for loaded vessels and 82 cents per ton for vessels in ballast. "It is uncertain what share of the traffic between Europe and the orient can be secured by the Panama canal in competition with the Suez route. In any event the Panama canal will obtain a small percentage of the total, but it will be well to assist the Panama route by lower tolls, in so far as that policy does not interfere with the establishment of tolls that will yield adequate total canal revenues."

Whooping Cough Superstitions.

Whooping cough is the subject of more quaint superstitions in England than almost any other disease. In Northamptonshire it is believed that if a small quantity of hair is cut from the nape of the sick child's neck, rolled in a piece of meat and given to a dog the whooping cough will be transferred to the animal. In Cornwall the child is fed with bread and butter which has been passed three times under the belly of a piebald horse. In Lancashire they still tell you that whooping cough will never attack a child that has ridden on a bear.—London Answers.

Well Worth It.

As dentists know very well that people do not call upon them merely for pleasure, they are not likely to be offended at this bit from the Washington Star:

"Didn't that man complain when you charged him for a broken appointment?"

"No," replied the dentist. "He said breaking an appointment with me is worth every cent it costs."

A Wide Acquaintance.

A nouvelle riche dowager has afforded much amusement while clambering up the slippery rounds of Washington's social ladder. One day after she had returned from circumnavigating the globe she engaged to entertain a drawing room with a boastful account of her travels. She had been everywhere, and her flow of slaughter house English was augmented by frequent wavings of her bediamonded hands and forceful noddings of her tiaraed head.

"Did you see the Dardanelles?" asked a sprightly debutante.

"And the Himalayas?" inquired another fair young bud.

"I dined with them in Paris," replied the dowager triumphantly.

And she wondered why everybody smiled.—Chicago Tribune.

MOST HUMAN OF BIRDS.

Not Only In Talking, but In Eating, the Parrot Imitates Man.

It is not only in imitating human speech that the parrot excels most of the birds. The parrot is alone among birds in taking food in its claws. With these two characteristics it makes more or less use of that which distinguishes humanity from the rest of the animal kingdom—the hand and the larynx.

The monkey uses its hands and the elephant its trunk in feeding. Various animals have a habit of pawing their food. Rodents have serviceable toes. Still, the parrot is pre-eminent among birds in this regard. The secretary bird is said to attack reptiles with its claws, and some observers have said that owls make partial use of their remarkably flexible perching toe somewhat more than does a hen in scratching for food. However, there is no other bird which, when given a piece of food, will accept it in its claws.

Parrots, of course, do not talk, as we use the word, in their wild state and are not known to be imitative of neighboring sounds nor to possess the repertory of the mocking bird. It is therefore a question whether or not their use of the claws is largely imitative also. The shape of the parrot's beak would indicate that some assistance in eating has always been a part of the bird's characteristics.

Like man, the parrot makes its appearance in the world naked and helpless.—Harper's Weekly.

NEW USE FOR TURKEYS.

Farmer Asks Check For Telling They Eat Army Worms.

From a farmer at Groveland, Ga., came a tip to congress of a way to rid the south of the army worm. M. M. Kicklighter wrote a letter in red ink to the "house or senate," in which he said:

"I saw your advertisement in the Atlanta paper for aid to check the army worms. I had ten acres of corn, and the army worms had just started in. I drove my turkeys in my field, and they ate the army worms in two days, and if it had not been for my turkeys I would have lost 500 bushels of corn by those worms.

"So please send me a check for said amount, for that is the only way to destroy the army worms."

Congress recently appropriated $25,000 to eliminate the worm.

His Composition.

"Now, Johnny," said the teacher after she had explained the meaning of the word, "I wish you would write a sentence containing the word defeat." After a struggle which lasted for about twenty minutes Johnny announced that he was ready to be heard. "Please read your composition," the teacher directed. "When you git shoes dat's too tite," Johnny read, "it's hard on de feet."—Chicago Record-Herald.

CHALFANT REUNION AUGUST 24

Members of Noted Family to Assemble at Shady Grove Park.

Officers of the Chalfant reunion association and committees are arranging for the reunion of relatives of the family to be held Saturday, August 24, at Shady Grove park. The last reunion was held two years ago at Beechwood park near Charleroi and nearly 400 members of the family were present. It is expected the reunion this year will be the best ever held. The Chalfant family is one of the oldest in the State, the first of the name coming from England with William Penn and settling in the vicinity of Philadelphia.

This year's reunion is being arranged for by the descendants of the youngest of the six sons, Walter Chalfant. He was born May 8, 1749. Like his father he was a Methodist and married a Methodist, rearing a family of three girls and eight boys. Four became physicians, four farmers and two soldiers. The first reunion was at Eldora park near Charleroi, August 25, 1904. At this reunion, only the descendants of Walter and Mollie B Chalfant were present. Since that time, the reunion association has been enlarged to take in the descendants of other children of the original Chalfant

MRS. SCOTT'S SUFFERING OVER

Doctors Advised An Operation. How She Escaped Told By Herself.

Buckner, Mo.—"For more than a year I suffered agonies from female troubles and the doctors at last decided there was no help for me unless I went to the hospital for an operation. I was awfully against that operation, and as a last resort wrote to you for special advice and I told you just what I suffered with bearing down pains, backache, shooting pains in my left side, and at times I could not touch my foot to the floor without screaming. I was short of breath, had smothered spells, felt dull and draggy all the time. I could not do any work, and oh how I dreaded to have an operation.

"I received a letter full of kind advice, which I followed, and if I had only written her a year ago I would have been saved so much suffering, for today I am a well woman. I am now keeping house again and do every bit of my own work. Every one in this part of the country knows it was Lydia E. There was an end to my happiness when I was back down-stairs again. Lydia Abercrombie was deserting her bridge game, and as the others, Mrs. Higginson, Jane Bliss, and especially Natalie, wanted to keep on playing, Natalie beckoned to me and I, perforce, must come.

"Perhaps we won't be so unfortunate this time," she drawled as I dropped down into the chair opposite her. "We've had splendid cards, Lydia and I."

But at the end of an hour, when Mrs. Higginson and Jane Bliss cried quits, Natalie totaled up her score and found she was two hundred dollars loser. I'm sure she didn't care about the money; she cared about losing. She looked at me sweetly in her droopy way.

"Will you allow me to give you some points?" she cooed. "Not that I am an authority, but perhaps then we can better understand each other."

"I'll be most grateful," I murmured, wishing that she and her silly bridge were at the bottom of the sea, or some such noble thought.

"If you'll come to my room, say, in half an hour," she drawled, "I'll be glad, to show you my queer way of playing bridge."

I smiled sweetly, getting control of myself and ignoring the accepted slam in the last of her speech. I was beginning to hate her, positively hate her, and I was highly pleased with myself over the discovery; I never, thought I was capable of hating any one.

At the end of half an hour, always punctual—thanks to Jo's pounding it into me—I was about to knock on Natalie's door when Mrs. Hazard appeared and asked me to come with her. Hap had come home with a proposition for a crowd of '09's over the holiday—the next day was a holiday—and there was no room for them. But he would go in with John Crownshield, and if I would share Laura's suite, we could bunk them all easily and it would be awfully jolly.

"Why, of course," I agreed.

In two minutes Mrs. Hazard's master mind was behind the arrangements. I was to keep my sitting-room, but I had to move my clothes. I rang for Celie.

It was some time later when I happened to think of Natalie and our appointment. I gave Celie instructions about the gowns. Just what could be left to be moved the following morning, and rushed to Natalie's room.

"I said half an hour, dear," she cooed, when, somewhat flushed and embarrassed, I stood before her.

"I know; I'm awfully sorry. I had some unforeseen duties," I apologized. I didn't choose to explain to her.

"I'm afraid I haven't time now," She consulted the clock. "I'm going into my bath and my massage. It takes me so long to dress. But if you will wait, perhaps while Minette is doing my hair—?" She raised her eyebrows questioningly. I always wondered why the action didn't draw up her eyelids.

"I'll be glad to wait," I replied, a blessed hypocrite, and I couldn't see for a minute that it was tact. I had a great many things to do and no time to be waiting for Natalie. The door of the dressing-room closed upon her and Minette and I was alone. I always shudder when I think of it. I sat down to wait and rest, for the day had tired me. The rain had ceased and the sky was clearing, and a salty taint in the air came in through the open windows. I the ght once I heard Laura calling my name, and presently Celie knocked on Natalie's door. Mrs. Hazard wanted me, and I went, expecting to be back before Natalie emerged from her bath, but in the rush of other things that came up I was delayed; one of the other things being the appearance of Mrs. Cutler, with a telegram, wanting to know if she could have a car to go into town.

Then the unexpected happened! Natalie pale and charmingly negligee, rushed—I never knew she could do such a thing—into Mrs. Hazard's presence. There was an end to my happiness when I was back down-stairs again. Lydia Abercrombie was deserting her bridge game, and as the others, Mrs. Higginson, Jane Bliss, and especially Natalie, wanted to keep on playing, Natalie beckoned to me and I, perforce, must come.

"Will you allow me to give you some points?" she cooed. "Not that I am an authority, but perhaps then we can better understand each other."

"I'll be most grateful," I murmured, wishing that she and her silly bridge were at the bottom of the sea, or some such noble thought.

"If you'll come to my room, say, in half an hour," she drawled, "I'll be glad, to show you my queer way of playing bridge."

I smiled sweetly, getting control of myself and ignoring the accepted slam in the last of her speech. I was beginning to hate her, positively hate her, and I was highly pleased with myself over the discovery; I never, thought I was capable of hating any one.

At the end of half an hour, always punctual—thanks to Jo's pounding it into me—I was about to knock on Natalie's door when Mrs. Hazard appeared and asked me to come with her. Hap had come home with a proposition for a crowd of '09's over the holiday—the next day was a holiday—and there was no room for them. But he would go in with John Crownshield, and if I would share Laura's suite, we could bunk them all easily and it would be awfully jolly.

"Why, of course," I agreed.

In two minutes Mrs. Hazard's master mind was behind the arrangements. I was to keep my sitting-room, but I had to move my clothes. I rang for Celie.

It was some time later when I happened to think of Natalie and our appointment. I gave Celie instructions about the gowns. Just what could be left to be moved the following morning, and rushed to Natalie's room.

"I said half an hour, dear," she cooed, when, somewhat flushed and embarrassed, I stood before her.

"I know; I'm awfully sorry. I had some unforeseen duties," I apologized. I didn't choose to explain to her.

"I'm afraid I haven't time now," She consulted the clock. "I'm going into my bath and my massage. It takes me so long to dress. But if you will wait, perhaps while Minette is doing my hair—?" She raised her eyebrows questioningly. I always wondered why the action didn't draw up her eyelids.

"I'll be glad to wait," I replied, a blessed hypocrite, and I couldn't see for a minute that it was tact. I had a great many things to do and no time to be waiting for Natalie. The door of the dressing-room closed upon her and Minette and I was alone. I always shudder when I think of it. I sat down to wait and rest, for the day had tired me. The rain had ceased and the sky was clearing, and a salty taint in the air came in through the open windows. I the ght once I heard Laura calling my name, and presently Celie knocked on Natalie's door. Mrs. Hazard wanted me, and I went, expecting to be back before Natalie emerged from her bath, but in the rush of other things that came up I was delayed; one of the other things being the appearance of Mrs. Cutler, with a telegram, wanting to know if she could have a car to go into town.

Then the unexpected happened! Natalie pale and charmingly negligee, rushed—I never knew she could do such a thing—into Mrs. Hazard's presence.

"I have been robbed!" she exclaimed without preliminary. Her voice had lost it's usual bored drawl and her dark eyes were alive. "Miss Codman has taken my pendant—the large ruby!"

Mrs. Hazard came to her feet as quickly as her short legs allowed—both my doors and hers across the corridor were standing open—and Laura, who was beside my window, wheeled suddenly and started in there. I caught her arm and held her.

"Impossible!" Mrs. Hazard snapped. "Natalie, are you crazy?"

"I am not crazy," Natalie replied. "I am sure of what I say."

"You do not mince words, certainly," Mrs. Hazard said. "On what authority do you accuse Miss Codman of such a thing?"

"The pendant was on my dressing table when I went into my bath," Natalie explained. "I left Miss Codman there alone; she was to wait for me. When I came back she was gone—"

"I sent for her," interrupted Mrs. Hazard.

"And the ruby is missing." Natalie pursued.

"Nothing else is missing?"

"Nothing else," admitted Natalie. "The ruby is sufficient."

There was a momentary silence after that. Mrs. Hazard evidently not knowing what more to say, and Natalie having said quite enough. I couldn't hold back Laura any longer, so I decided to go in first. But when I was face to face with Natalie and dear Mrs. Hazard I stood there, tragically silent, with an odd ache in my throat.

"Miss Codman will speak for herself," Mrs. Hazard said in her direct way.

I shook my head finally. Words just wouldn't come.

"She seems not to be able to speak for herself," Natalie drawled, in that awfully civil tone of hers.

"I should say not" Laura broke in. "You've quite knocked her speechless."

"I don't doubt it," retorted Natalie, losing her admirable temper.

And really I don't know where the scene would have ended if at that moment, Hap hadn't appeared in the doorway.

"Great Lord, what's the matter?" he exclaimed.

Natalie, evidently realizing her negligee, started out, but Laura blocked the way. I sat down; my knees refused to support me any longer.

"Natalie says Loulie has stolen her ruby pendant," Laura answered him frankly.

He blinked as if he hadn't quite heard, and his face settled into the most comically surprised expression I have ever seen. He reached a hand to his forehead and brushed aside the forelock. I suddenly shivered, and was calm; my throat relaxed I was thinking of that advice Jo had given me.

"I didn't take the pendant," I said. "I didn't see it. I was only there a moment when Celie came for me. If you want to make sure you may search me!"

"What are you people trying to do? Josh me?" Hap demanded.

"I think we're all daft," Mrs. Hazard snapped—Laura was the only absolutely cool person there—Mrs. Hazard patted my shoulder, and the touch of her dear, fat hand was wonderfully sweet to me. "I don't think you need searching, my dear child," she went on. "I don't want anything but your word. I shall send for a detective to look after us as long as Natalie insists upon keeping her jewels. This disappearing one by one is most peculiar Hap, will you call long distance, please, and see if you can get John?"

Natalie drew herself up regally—regal even in a kimono, with her hair just looped up.

"Then Miss Codman is quite above reproach?" she inquired, lifting her eyebrows.

"Miss Codman is quite above reproach, Natalie," Mrs. Hazard said positively. "I think you are mistaken, my dear girl, and I think you are careless Why didn't you take your jewels with you?"

"Into my bath?" Natalie exclaimed

"Into your bath," Mrs. Hazard repeated, "where you could keep your eyes on them. I should think you had had warning enough."

"I wish you'd search me," I said wearily, "and let me go away; go home to my sister."

"Oh, gracious, Loulie, we are not going to let you run away," Laura objected "We'll just find out who took Natalie's ruby and those other things." I knew she was thinking of Winthrop

"We seem to be getting away from my original statement," Natalie cut in sharply "Do you refuse to believe me when I say—?"

"I do," interrupted Mrs. Hazard, "but I shall have a detective here tomorrow if possible. Hap, is Central asleep?"

Natalie was dismissed; she knew it She floated away with only fifty minutes to dress, and Mrs. Hazard was rather insistent about her dinner hour. I arose stiffly. I wasn't sure just what I should do or say; everything was muddled and queer. Mrs. Hazard caught John just as he was leaving the office and began talking to him about a detective, and Hap stood by the window, with his hands dug deep into his trousers pockets Laura was searching a local telephone book for a number. I waited painfully, and when Mrs. Hazard released the wire Laura called Winthrop

"I want to know if he's at home," she explained to us. "Of course he couldn't have been here without some one of us seeing him, but I want to make sure."

Winthrop himself answered her, and a minute later, after a foolish question, she hung up the receiver satisfied My mind flew to the duke, but, as if in contradiction of my thought, I saw him coming from the beach with Jane Bliss. Against me this time was the silly circumstantial evidence.

"Does any one here believe I took that ruby?" I asked brokenly.

"You silly Loulie!" Laura exclaimed affectionately.

"My dear child,"—Mrs. Hazard came to me and took my hand in her own seriously and impressively—"I've never yet made a mistake in estimating a person. I was sure of you that first day I talked to you. I know you now, and I am more sure, even if I forget that you are Joshua Codman's daughter. There's something queer about all this—something we don't understand. Natalie began to lose her jewels one by one before she ever saw you. She's sure of her maid—"

"Besides, Minette wasn't at the reception," Laura interrupted.

"But we're going to find out who has taken those jewels, and I shall see that the rest are put in a safety vault if I have to do it myself. I can't ask her to leave"

"If I could only see Jo." I pleaded, and I began to cry on Mrs. Hazard's bosom, with my tears splashing the lavender silk of her gown.

"Why not send for her?" she asked. "Why, of course you want your sister. I'll ask her to come. There, don't cry. Give me the address again, dear. I'll telephone, if you don't think it will frighten her. She can come Wednesday. Shall I say a week? Now, get on your hat and go for a walk, or take the runabout if you wish. There! The trouble's all over. Don't think of it any more."

CHAPTER XII.

The Same Old Story.

I ran across the lawn to the beach. I didn't want the runabout. I wanted to be away from everybody and everything and try to think. I felt terribly helpless. The roar of the waves smashing against the rocks brought me peace. Clouds were scurrying northward before a brisk wind, and the sun came bulging through.

I was nearly to the steps which led down from the rocks above to the sand before I realized that Hap was with me; he was panting, his face red from exertion.

"How you do run!" he complained "You'd make Diana go hide her head in a sack. Wait for a fellow, won't you?"

I clattered down the steps and collapsed on the lower one I couldn't speak, for I was all out of wind myself. We both sat looking out over the water, breathing hard.

"Do you believe that awful thing?" I managed to ask at last.

I wasn't in the least prepared for what happened. He seized me in his arms, and for the first time in my life a man's lips were pressed against my own

"That's what I believe," he said, "and that—and that!"

In the first shock of my surprise I let his lips rest against mine for a moment, then I gasped and put out my two hands and pushed. It was as if I were pushing against the Chinese Wall. I forgot to remember that he was the best tackle Harvard ever had He was smiling at me, and his lips threatened again; two tears brimmed from my eyes and splashed over

"You poor little girl!" he exclaimed. "I frightened you Please don't cry."

"How dare you?" I sobbed

"Why, I forgot to tell you." He tried to kiss me again, but I pressed my face against his shoulder in desperation "I love you Put your arms around my neck, dear; there's not a soul in sight Now whisper something to me—darling!"

I brought my head up suddenly Here I was, allowing Hap to hold me in his arms on an open beach I looked up, and down, and out toward the water; no, there was not a soul in sight. The boats were deserted, the rocks behind hid us completely from the house. I met his eyes, and there was that look in them I had never been able to take care of I had to see it, while his lips were dangerously near and his arms held me close against his heart. I fell to trembling ridiculously.

"You Poor Little Girl!" He Exclaimed.

"Oh!"

"Darling!"

He kissed my hair, my eyes, my lips; dropped bits of passionate sentences punctuated with kisses. I caught my breath in ecstasy, and my hands reached up and encircled his neck.

There are only a few words to say, after all, words that have been said over and over again—nothing new—but they are quite adequate I had never admitted even to myself that I loved him. I had pushed it back and rampled it down, and refused to listen when my heart threatened to speak I realized that I must not listen now; that I was not strong enough to listen; that there was Natalie's awful accusation; that I was just a servant in the house; that his money was a gulf between us, his social position, what his mother expected of his future; a gulf so wide across that it would take a great deal of unselfish love and affection on the part of Mrs. Hazard to bridge it.

I unlaced my fingers and struggled free of his arms His mother never intended anything like this.

"Stop! Please stop!" I pleaded The tears ran down my cheeks, and I'm a fright when I cry. "I can't listen; I must not!"

I started to go back up the steps. He caught my hand and held it pressed tightly in both his own; and he was the strongest I only reached the step above, and sat down again.

"Loulie this is the first thing I've been serious about in my life," he said earnestly. "Do you believe me, dear? Don't you see I'm serious" I wouldn't kiss you lightly" This time he kissed the tips of my fingers within his own "I didn't rush you, dear, because I—I was afraid! I've always done that, rushed, but it's because I was never serious."

He smiled up at me and crushed my hand against his cheek. I laughed to keep from crying, but the silly tears would keep coming I was crying because he was serious. I had never seen him serious before

"I love you!" he whispered "I loved you from the moment I saw you. I knew you were my Fate, or whatever it is you are, my sweetheart What is that? 'The bolt of Cupid fell?' I've forgotten. I never could remember Shakespeare, but it's beautiful, and I think it's what I mean. If I could only tell you. Do you remember how my mother said: 'This is Miss Codman'? You smiled at me and I grinned back at you I wouldn't have missed that luncheon for all the Peabodys in the world I was hard hit, sweetheart We talked baseball when I wanted to tell you how beautiful your eyes were, and how I loved the light on your hair, the curve of your lips when you smiled—Loulie, I read that but it's what I mean I've been loving you every blessed minute since I've almost told you a thousand times Haven't you guessed it?"

I brushed aside the forelock over his eyes—how weak women are!—and just that touch upon his forehead was my undoing. I leaned forward to surrender my lips to him, to kiss the fingers that held mine, when suddenly I remembered I must not. Frantically I tried to get my hands away from him.

"Let me go, Hap," I pleaded "Let me go! Let me go! And don't, if you love me, ever speak of these things again."

He twisted around upon his knees.

"Look at me, dear! I'm afraid I don't understand. Why are you not to listen?"

"That awful accusation—" I began. I could not go on.

"Oh, piffle!"

"How do you know it isn't true?" I cried brokenly. "I was there, the ruby is missing—how do you know it isn't true?"

"How do I know the skies will not fall, my sweetheart? Because they won't. That's how I know Natalie's accusation isn't true—because it isn't." He smiled at me, wonderfully pleased with his silly argument.

"Your mother—" I reminded him tragically.

"You think she would object?"

"I think she would at least be terribly disappointed."

He compelled me to meet his eyes His were steady, and there was a sweetness in the expression about his mouth that played havoc with me.

"Perhaps you don't know it, my dear little girl," he said, "but there's nobody in this world can keep me from marrying you."

I got up to go I had to dress for dinner; so had he. We were both crazy and Mrs. Hazard was so particular about her dinner hour. He looked at his watch

"We have fifteen minutes yet," he persuaded. "Fifteen dear, precious minutes I haven't told you all. I haven't said—"

I tried to go.

"It takes Celie ten minutes to hook me into my gown," I told him desperately, "and she'll shriek if I only give her five minutes for my hair; then five minutes to get to my room and five minutes—"

"Can't you coax Celie down to three minutes for your gown, and two minutes for your hair, and—come down a step lower, please, or our heads will be above the wall when I kiss you."

"You are not to kiss me again!" I gasped.

I gave my hand a pull; so did he.

"Come down a step, darling. I'll not get another kiss for an hour—"

"You'll never get another," I interrupted I tried to believe that.

"For an hour," he pursued stubbornly "And you haven't told me the one thing in all the world I want to hear. There's a good girl!"

He was the strongest; I went down the next step to preserve my balance. There was no use struggling against a kiss; he was the best tackle Harvard ever had.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Department of Correspondence.

I simply couldn't manage to dress in five minutes, although Celie, like the jewel she is, had put out the simplest gown Mrs. Hazard allowed me and began throwing my clothes at me the minute I appeared. I collapsed into a chair and she pulled the pins from my hair. My face was streaked with tear-stains where I had cried, my eyes were red, my nose worse. Celia looked at me in despair while the clock ticked off the seconds fiendishly—ticked off two minutes, to be exact—and chatter from the drawing-room floated up to me through the open windows. That punctual dinner gong would sound in just three minutes.

"Ah, Mademoiselle, you are ill!" Celie cried alarmed. "You have been crying If you please, will Mademoiselle allow me the time for massage? Mademoiselle is most—"

"Yes, Celie, I'm a wreck," I interrupted in English, "and there's no woman in the world can dress in three minutes. Will you ask Mrs. Hazard to excuse me for this one evening—if she hasn't already gone down? Tell her I have a headache; my head does ache, Celie. Run! If she has gone down come back quickly and hook me every other hook and trust to luck. I'll do my hair while you're gone."

She was already across the corridor and I gave my hair a twist, a loop, stuck pins in, blessed the Lord for the curls he had given me, and tried to repair my damaged face with a smear of cold cream. I had always read of shining eyes and glowing cheeks after what I had just been through; when a man had given me his heart, and had kissed me into acknowledging that I loved him, besides making me promise all sorts of wonderful promises I knew I couldn't keep I couldn't, I couldn't, I couldn't.

I began to cry again, but I didn't have time to cry. I winked back the tears and smeared on more cream; Mrs. Hazard appeared.

"My dear child!" she exclaimed. "What is the matter? Celie says you are ill?"

"Oh, it's nothing, but I've been crying—as you know," I added hastily, "and I'm a fright, and I can't get dressed before that gong sounds. I don't feel like talking. Would it be too much to ask if I might have a headache and stay here for once?"

"Of course, you may," she replied sympathetically. "I should have been the one to suggest it. My dear, don't worry, don't—there's the gong! Send Celie for your dinner, and if you need me, send for me. Remember there's nothing to cry about."

She bustled out in her dear, fat way. I heard her speak to Hap in the corridor, and my fingers, smearing the cold cream, trembled against my face at the sound of his voice. He loved me; he loved me; he loved me! Suddenly something inside me gave way, either in my brain or my heart, I don't know which, and I went forward across my dressing-table, my greasy face against the dainty pink and white covering, and had a real cry, a jolly, soul-refreshing weep.

"Ah, Mademoiselle ees in ze grand deestress!" Celie exclaimed: "Mademoiselle ees ill, Mademoiselle 'as nevaire—"

I knew Celie was in "ze grand deestress" herself when she lapsed into English. I sat up again, wiping the tears from my eyes and the grease from my face.

"Get me my dinner, Celie," I said between sobs "I'm so hungry. I'll feel better when I eat something."

She looked at me astonished. She knew I was not quite hopeless as long as I was hungry.

"Mademoiselle will not faint?" she inquired.

"I'll not faint unless you fail to come with the dinner," I assured her. "Now hurry!"

When the door closed upon her I looked into the mirror and smiled, not at what I saw there, although it was funny enough, but I smiled because—I closed my eyes ecstatically. He loved me; he had kissed me!

I sat there a long time, how long I don't know, dreaming. I had never allowed myself the luxury of such thoughts. I had pushed them back and trampled them down, and refused to listen How dear was that expression about his mouth, and how beautiful his eyes! I loved the forelock! I had touched it! I covered my face suddenly My throat was tight; I was suffocating with happiness.

I had loved him from the first. I knew that now I wondered that I didn't realize my danger from the minute Mrs. Hazard made her proposal to me. I remembered perfectly how he had looked at me that first meeting; a silly, unromantic place it was—a crowded street, and I had wisps of hair dangling about my ears. Funny! Silly things like that to come sneaking into one's thoughts at such a time. I had learned the sound of the gray car; I admitted now that I had listened for it. I knew his step from the first. I knew, too, that he had always been near; and I had to talk baseball to him, it was part of my job. Baseball? Pshaw! An excuse. Natalie? Gracious, she never had a chance, after he saw me! I must not think that! How awful! But he had said so; his lips said so, his eyes said so He loved me! And I cried about it to my heart's content.

I rose suddenly and went to the window, with my unfastened gown falling about me. I sank down and put my arms upon the casement. His mother must not know. I couldn't lose her love and trust. I'd have to tell Jo. Of course, I couldn't marry him; I knew that, knew it, knew it! Besides, Natalie had said I had taken her silly ruby. I must prove I didn't. But how? Jo would know. Poor Jo! She knew something was going to happen to me. She knew from the beginning I was going to fall in love with somebody!

The air was cool and salty and good against my hot face. Everything was still and the trees cast long, placid shadows on the grass from the dying sun. Vincent, tinkering with the engine of the limousine in the driveway below, was talking softly to Henri, the boy who looked after the tennis courts, but the conversation reached me plainly. Vincent was trying to speak French, and Henri trying to answer in English. Funny! The slang they used, although Henri expressed himself fully as well as His Grace. I could hear Winthrop yelling to a fisherman. A moment later a motor-boat sounded—Winthrop's boat—and a searchlight faintly pierced the fast-falling twilight.

I discarded the evening gown and put on the white flannel dress in which I played tennis. I knotted a blue scarf beneath the collar and tied a blue ribbon around my hair. He loved the ribbon; he had said so once I wore it when I played tennis to keep the hair out of my eyes; now I put it on, trying to be a girl again, just as I was when Jo and I—I would not cry again!

One isn't quite broken-hearted when one can eat. I was finishing my coffee when Celie brought me a note. I know I went red as she handed it to me. I wonder if I had expected it. I tried to speak casually.

"Thank you, Celie. I won't need you again tonight. You may go." I didn't dare open it while she was there.

"But Monsieur requests the answer, Mademoiselle.

"There's no answer, Celie," I said, without looking at it.

Celie hesitated, looked at me appealingly, and went out. Then I read my first love letter:

My Own:—The sun has gone out, the earth is a barren waste. I refuse to believe there will ever be light again until I can see you. Why did you not come down to dinner? Celie says you are ill; mother says it's because you didn't have time to dress I'm a beast for keeping you. I have spoiled the evening. Are you really ill, darling? If it's the dress, won't you come now? I shall wait for you on the stairs. Impatiently. HAP.

I kissed the name—that dear, silly nickname—and put the letter in my bosom, over my heart. It was stiff and uncomfortable, and I wished he had made a happier choice of stationery, but it was very sweet there, over my heart. I watched the moon coming up, a rim of silver showing along the horizon, then a stream of light shimmering, dancing across the water. He was waiting on the stairs for me!

It was dreadfully stupid alone. Of course, no one would disturb me. . . "Are you ill, darling?" . . . Dorothy was playing the piano below. Gracious! Why didn't some one keep her from singing Sleepy Song so soon? She'd put everybody to yawning. I knew then why I was necessary. I hoped my fiends wouldn't get mixed. . . . "If it's the dress, won't you come now?" . . . I surveyed myself in the mirror and shook my head. I couldn't go down; I didn't want to go Natalie had said I was a thief! But he was waiting on the stairs for me, and that was—heavenly!

Now, I always thought Celie an exception. She isn't. She's just like every other French maid. She takes a fiendish delight in anything that appears the least romantic or clandestine. She came in with a second note, beaming. I looked at her frowning a bit, and took it.

The Cleveland Naps have been coming along strong of late, and it's a pretty safe bet that the Davis outfit will finish in the first division

The Boston Braves had a chance to sign Eddie Rixey, but couldn't see him and the Quakers jumped in and signed the University of Virginia star.

Bob Bescher, of the Cincinnati Reds, is the 'Speed King' of the National League. Bob leads the organization both in run getting and base stealing

Joe Kelly's Toronto team has come to the front on the run and is giving Rochester and Baltimore a real battle for the International League pennant

The Pirates and the Cubs did great work during their Eastern trip and if they can keep up the pace at home, the Giants will have to go some to hold their own.

Boston and Washington can pack and pack during their Western trip. The Red Sox won 10 games lost 5 and tied one while the Senators copped 10 contests and lost 6.

One noticeable feature of the American League race is the fact that very few fans throughout the country would begrudge the Senators a pennant. Washington never has had anything that resembled a championship, and the majority of the fans are pulling for "Old Fox" Griffith's boys to win.

FLOOD FORCES POOR DIRECTOR TO LEAVE CAR AND WALK HERE

Barnhart Trudges from Murphy's Sliding in Worst Storm Experienced.

Colonel J. J. Barnhart, county poor director, who was caught in the storm Monday enroute to Mt. Pleasant to visit his son-in law, Joseph McGee, who was operated on for appendicitis, described his experience as most thrilling. "I served four years in the army," he declared, "and I never saw anything like it. I would rather go into a battle than to face that again. It was titanic. For a time I thought we would have to swim out."

Colonel Barnhart left here on the 2:30 car Monday afternoon, and the flood was reached at a point beyond Murphy's Sliding. The motorman zigzagged his car backward and forward, keeping it out of the water as much as possible and preventing overturning.

"I saw the water coming," continued Mr. Barnhart. "It was rolling in from Pennsville. We ran into it beyond Murphy's Sliding."

Barnhart said he saw piles of ties, 10 to 15 feet high, washed away. Chickens, some dead and others on floating timbers, were washed away in the furious waters. At one place Colonel Barnhart saw a boot and pulled it from the water.

At Moyer, two teamsters caught in the flood with their wagons and horses, unhitched the horses, which swam to safety. The men clambered back into the wagon to wait until the flood receded. At another point, on his way back to Connellsville, Colonel Barnhart saw another wagon from which the horses had been unhitched.

A corn field belonging to Kell Long and an adjacent field of oats, said Colonel Barnhart, were flooded and washed away. Bushels of potatoes were washed away by the flood Barnhart exhibited a tuber he had taken from the water.

At Davidson, a boy waded knee deep into the water, to reach a big chicken on a log. The lad's mother stood on dry land, directing her son. The lad rescued the fowl and made his way safely back.

There were 16 persons on the car with Mr. Barnhart. A traveling salesman carrying a valise, alighted with Barnhart and started to walk back to Connellsville. The other passengers, two of whom were women, remained on the car which was in charge of Conductor Taylor.

Barnhart and the sale man followed the Pennsylvania railroad tracks back into town.

JIM JEFFRIES "LICKED" BY A STRANGER IN A FIGHT FOR BUCK

Former Champion Returns From Hunt With Sprained Ankle and Sore Stomach.

United Press Telegram

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 22.—A battle in the wilderness in which Jim J. Jeffries figured, and as a result of which he received a badly twisted ankle, was told today when Jeffries and his brother Jack, returned from a hunting trip near Soledad, Cal.

Jeffries and an unidentified hunter fired simultaneously at a buck. The animal fell, and each man claimed it. The stranger unaware of Jeffries' identity, attempted to take the carcass by force. Jeffries swung his mighty right at the enemy's jaw, missed, and a fierce mixup ensued. A timely butt in the stomach from the stranger's head sent the former champion down an 80 foot incline where he twisted his ankle. Jeffries grabbed the buck's legs as he fell and dragged the animal with him.

Thinking Jeffries had been killed, the stranger fled. Jack Jeffries found his brother two hours later, and helped him into camp.

WRIGHT-METZLER'S GROCERY.

Whenever a Package Comes to the Home the Little Boy Hopes It is Something to Eat.

—and the grocer's basket is the gateway to Paradise—for him.

Right now is a very critical time for the boy or stomach. Dog-days are about over but the humidity that's prevailed for so long is dangerous to those who eat too much. Beware of foods of uncertain purity; a little of that is worse than too much good food.

We zealously guard the purity of all food stuffs that come into and go out of this Pure Food Grocery; and still the stuff we eat could be improved upon.

Doubly dangerous is foods that this extra precaution is not exercised upon; a careless grocer could cause untold anxiety in any home. Be careful! Buy where you think purity can be depended upon.

We are not writing this for sole benefit of Wright-Metzler's grocery. While wholesomeness is our first thought from a merchandising point of view. We have in mind every human being whose eye encounters this notice.

If you have green goods in your garden you know more about what you've watched over than about such stuff that is sold in groceries.

Put up all the fruit you can. Next winter you'll know that it's pure.

But those things that come from selling places—

"Trust-Busting" in Connellsville One Hundred and Two Years Ago.

Saunter down Main street to the Yough Bridge, and, to your right, the ground now occupied by the City Hall is the exact site of the Market House erected in 1810. It was the first public building in Connellsville. Among the things exchanged at the Market House were vegetables, bees-wax, home made sugar, tallow, fresh and salt meats (mainly pork), fruits, etc.

Then, the man who tried to corner the market and boost the cost of living was dealt with severely. The ordinance read, in part, "anybody—store keepers excepted—buying a commodity and selling it again the same day, at an advance in price. is to be fined one dollar in money."

And "One Dollar" was not so easily rounded-up 102 years ago as now.
